Welcome. Welcome. Welcome, everybody.

00:00:16

Welcome to my Houston family. I am so proud to be here back in Houston with my Mama T and my sister. Welcome to this day, this remarkable, this joyous day.

A date, a day, a time, a moment with weight and meaning for our country, for our people and for the world. A moment, Houston, where we grab back the pen from those who are trying to write an American story of division and hatred.

00:00:58

A moment when we grab back the pen from those who are trying to write an American story of misogyny and racism. We are grabbing back the pen from those who are trying to write an American story that would deny the right for women to make our own decisions about our bodies.

00:01:20

Houston, we are grabbing back the pen.

00:01:31

We are grabbing back the pen. That pin. To forge a new path with Kamala Harris and Tim Waltz. We are grabbing back the pen to write a new American story. A story of community, of equality, strength, of kindness and of hope.

00:01:48

When I was a little girl and I pledged allegiance to the United States of America, that meant something to me. That flag means something to me. And today, that means grabbing that pen and casting my vote, as I already did two days ago for Kamala Harris and Tim Watts.

Now, Houston, you've already had a hand in creating destiny, so do what you do and do this thing again. Let's.
